bid to remind the world of the dangers posed by nuclear weapons, the Global Initiative to Stop Nuclear Weapons is calling for a global campaign to raise awareness of their potential consequences.

“Nuclear weapons pose a significant threat to the life and liberty of all humanity,” says GISN executive director, Ben Leather. “In the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11th, 2001, and the launching of the US’ Global War on Terror, it is time for the world’s leaders to stop doing the same old thing — deploying nuclear weapons — and start taking steps to prevent those weapons from being used in the first place.” Through a multi-pronged campaign, the GISN plans to: raise awareness of the threat posed by Occ13bf012

Differences in the Quality of Learning in Computer-Based Learning and in School-Based Learning Tran A., Kaul J. Abstract More than 30.2 million Americans are currently taking college-level Computer Based Learning (CBL) courses. Although both CBL and school-based learning utilize the same basic instructional activities (e.g., lecture, group discussion, and problem solving) and materials, CBL is delivered in a self-paced, flexible, learner-driven format. In response to increasing numbers of CBL courses and growing public interest in this approach, a comparison was made of the quality of CBL courses in math, business
