As a result of the constant threat of cybercriminals in online transactions, the majority of banks and payment companies have become more vigilant when it comes to regulating the safety and security of their clients. That's why it's important to have up-to-date, reliable security programs on your computers, mobiles and tablets. Going online to conduct business using your bank accounts, credit cards or any other type of payment method is not only convenient but also provides great freedom and a wide range of choices when it comes to your purchasing transactions. However, it's also fairly easy for hackers to gain your trust, infiltrate your computer, steal information from you and use it for their own benefit. This is when your valuable data and money are at the greatest risk. This is precisely why viruses are considered to be a serious threat to computers. What Does a Virus Do? A virus can have several effects on your computer or any device it is running on. For instance, a virus can delete files, copy personal information or change the settings of your computer. The most obvious symptom of being infected by a virus is a slowdown of your system and the appearance of a pop-up window. The appearance of such a window means that the infection has spread to all the files and objects on your computer and therefore it's highly advisable to immediately call your antivirus program for prompt help. What Can a Virus do? When it comes to a virus, the options are limitless, as it can damage or corrupt files, delete entire data or even erase
